EJERCICIOS

Seven-year-old boy recovering well after five-organ transplant

A seven-year-old boy has become the first child to undergo a five-organ transplant in a single operation. Jay Crouch, who has a condition that left his small intestine twisted and has caused complications with other organs since he was six weeks old, is recovering at home after receiving two kidneys, a pancreas, liver and small bowel during the 10-hour operation at Birmingham children's hospital. The surgery, which became necessary, has allowed him to have food for the first time.

His mother, Katie Freestone, 28, said their relatives were "all absolutely amazed at the incredible progress Jay has made in a relatively short space of time", after doctors said he was recovering well from the complex operation. "There also aren't enough words to say thank you to the donor and their family and, while we're amazed that Jay has been given this chance, we're also incredibly aware of the sadness and tragedy that another family had to endure to make this possible," she said.

The operation required a team of 12, including anaesthetists, two surgeons, five nurses and three junior doctors – as well as additional medical staff who were involved with the patient's wider care. Freestone thanked them, saying it was "fantastic" to be able to take her son home. "It means we can finally get back to our own routine and Jay can be comfortable in his own space." Doctors diagnosed Jay, who is from Leicestershire, with short bowel syndrome after discovering that his small intestine was twisted. The condition prevented him from eating and digesting food, meaning he had to be fed intravenously and required continuous treatment. But that led to the failure of his organs, making the operation necessary.
